

Foreword By Dominic Grieve

Law is sometimes seen as dry, but for those who practice it, its purpose is often surrounded by emotion.

In The Human's in the Telling, the life and work of David Maxwell Fyfe, both as a prosecutor at Nuremberg and as a politician in helping create the European Convention on Human Rights reflects this split. He worked with others to use the law to do justice when faced with the most appalling crimes and to protect future generations from any repetition in a way that was ground breaking.

It echoed his deepest personal feelings and outlook born of his own life and family history. The Human's in the Telling brings this out vividly and is a must for all who want to build a better world.
